Experience Through New Alliances With CarsDirect.com and Greenlight.com

PRNewswire
IRVINE, Calif.

Kelley Blue Book® (kbb.com), the most visited automotive web site in the nation, announced today it has enhanced its car-buying experience to include new ways to use the Internet to buy cars. Shoppers now can choose from a variety of approaches, including new "buy direct" services from CarsDirect.com and Greenlight.com. These services augment the existing experiences of being referred to a dealer, represented by companies such as AutoNation.com, Microsoft CarPoint and GM BuyPower. The site also links directly to over 9,000 dealer web sites.

According to Stephen Henson, director of marketing and business development at Kelley Blue Book, "These alliances further advance our strategy to 'empower' the car-buying consumer by offering unbiased, accurate information, as well as a choice of car-purchasing experiences."

Henson went on to point out that the new kbb.com partners were selected based on their sites' functionality and ability to provide a positive web experience for the car-buying consumer. A service appears on kbb.com only if it has a significant presence in the state in which the user lives. Henson said that Kelley Blue Book will also begin to survey its users to measure their level of satisfaction and to provide independent feedback to each company.
