

Why December May Be the Best Time to Buy a New Car

A Great Car Deal Could Be on Your Holiday Shopping List, Says No. 1 Car Research Site

You know that loved one who wants a new car this holiday season? According to Kelley Blue Book's kbb.com, the most visited vehicle pricing Web site, December may very well be the best month for getting a great deal on that four-wheeled gift.

According to Kelley Blue Book's executive editor and 20-year veteran of the company, Charlie Vogelheim, "There are several factors that make December one of the best months to haggle the lowest price out of your local dealer."

1. Most dealerships and their salespeople have end of the month quotas to meet.
2. There are also annual quotas dealers like to meet because the number of cars a dealer sells over a year's time determines what and how much inventory they'll receive in the coming year from their franchise manufacturer.
3. Dealers and manufacturers are also looking for bragging rights of having the best selling car, truck or SUV in America. You need to offer deals at the end of the year to reach that magic number.
4. There is something called 'inventory tax' that dealers in most states have to pay on all unsold inventory on January 1. The best way to get around this is to sell as many cars as possible before December 31.
5. With new model year vehicles arriving, many dealers may be offering great deals on last year's models to make room for the new models. If the car has been redesigned (i.e. Ford Mustang) you may want to stick to the new styling.
6. Well, there aren't that many people wandering snow-covered lots in 19 degree weather. In colder areas, buyers are few and far between. Any buyer is a good buyer.

These factors together make December one of the best months for negotiating the lowest possible price on a new car.

Vogelheim recommends that you always do your homework before heading to the dealership as this is one of the largest purchases you can make other than buying a house. "Many manufacturers are offering cut-rate financing or rebates on most 2004 vehicles and even some 2005 models. Determine what incentives are available on the cars you are looking at. And also check the car's MSRP, dealer invoice price and the transaction value or what other people are paying for a new car this week. You can find all of these things on the Internet today at sites like kbb.com. Print them and bring them with you to the dealership."

If you are not the haggling kind, you can always request a couple of price quotes online from your local dealer. Sites like Kelley Blue Book's allow car buyers to submit price quotes to several dealers in three quick steps. Going this route, you can get dealers to compete for your business without ever leaving your house.
